Well, do we protect our own legal rights? Is our present administration responsible for its acts? Is there any respect for the law remaining? Where is there justice? Can a good Government exist without justice? Is there any security? Has any one any hope, so that he can care to study? Who has any knowledge. so that he can promote sciences? Who possess any science so that he can promote manufactures? Who possess any art so that he conmanufacture his own cotton and silk, and get a living and profit thereby? Come, then, zealous men of our religion, let us not fail in our duty, let us protect the rights of the people, so that we may obtain good administration, and be able thereby to obtain a subsistence and exist in the

THE VOLUNTEER REVIEW AT PORTSMOUTH.

The Pall Mall Gazette (April 14) says:—As our morning contemporaries each devote some four or five columns to an account of the volum. teer review at Portsmouth, we may, perhaps, venture to assume that the public has had about enough of the subject for one day. The newspaper descriptions of these affairs have now been reduced to what lawyers call a " commonform." On the occasion of the first visit of the volunteers to Brighton, the Times gave an honest straightforward narrative of the proceedings; but for some reason or other if repented of its candour, and has since set the example of flattering instead of criticising the volunteers. Everything and everybody are praised all round, and whatever happens in reality, there is never any hitch or short-coming in the ideal picture of the imaginative reporters. One of the stereotyped absurdities of these articles is the boast which is annually made of the number of men carried by rail from one point to another. A moment's reflection, of course, would show that there is really nothing remarkable in the transaction. . . . Of the doings at Portsmooth yesterday there is no need to say much. Although the programme as finally adjusted was carried out, the previous blundering unmistakably left its mark on the proceedings. The first error of the volunteer officers on the committee was in choosing a "march past" in preference to a sham fight, when it was declared that the two could not be combined; and the next in retaining that foolish formality in addition to the scam fight when it was discovered 18 that the volunteers insisted upon the latter. The experience of yesterday proved conclusively that active evolutions are far more attrac-tive both to the troops and the spectators. All the best corps used their atmost influence to escape the march past, and to enlist under the "enemy's" flag; and compared with Portsdown-hill, where the fight took place. Southsea common, the scene of the march past, was almost described. The volunteer regiments concerned in the latter ceremony certainly failed to gain much credit thereby, for their marching was for the most part loose and slovenly, in marked contrast to the firm and solid lines of the regulars on the ground. Nearly an hour and a half was wasted at the caluting-post, and the result was that a portion of the defending force was rather behind time in joining in the sham fight. The chief feature of the contest-had rather a ludicrous effect.

the attempt of the enemy to hold the villages of Cosham and Wymering-was exceedingly picturesque, and gave the volunteers a very good conception of fighting among streets and houses, though the delighted interest of the spectators sented comfortably at the windows
